OLD LANDMARK RAZED BY FLAMES AT SAN CARLOS

A barn belonging to Conrad Weil, and located in White Oaks, was completely destroyed by a fire on Tuesday evening. The barn was one of the old landmarks of that district and was formerly a part of the estate of the late John Britton.

The cause of the fire has not been learned, but it is thought that a tramp may have been asleep in the building and thrown a burning match into some hay which was in the loft. Both the Redwood City and the San Carlos departments answered the call and worked hard to save the trees which surrounded the buildings from burning. The building, itself, was too far gone when discovered to be saved.

BANDITS THANK JUDGE FOR JAIL SENTENCE

It is seldom that a prisoner thanks a judge for a jail sentence, more often he invokes anathemas upon the head of the committing magistrate, but such a thing did happen in the superior court yesterday. Eddie Harrison and W. J. Murray plead guilty to petty larceny, they having robbed Andrew Matison of $6 and a watch at Menlo Park last month. The court on hearing the plea at once sentenced the two hobos to serve thirty days in the county jail. Both arose immediately and with a graceful bow said in unison, "We thank you, your honor." They were taken to Hotel McGovern, where they will be away from the wind and storms of the outer world and enjoy the appetizing menu of Mine Host McGovrn for a whole month.

CONSTRUCTION OF NEW ROADWAY IS URGED

The formation of a boulevard district with the purpose of building a link or state highway from San Francisco to connect with the present system in Monterey county and to use the roadbed of the abandoned Ocean Shore R. R. Company's line along the coast side of this county was urged before the board by Senator M. B. Johnson at the meeting of the board Monday. Johnson said that this road would be of inestimable value to the residents of this and Santa Cruz counties as well as to the people of San Francisco. It would relieve the traffic conditions on the present highways and would provide a scenic route second to none in California.

The state is not now in a position to build such a road, Johnson said, but by several counties getting together in a district it could be put through without trouble. Johnson also urged that it be done immediately. The roadbed of the old railroad is still good, he said, and would save thousands of dollars in grading, but every rain damages the road and in time it will be obliterated if some use is not made of it before long.

Ben Blow of the California State Automobile Association was also present and was introduced by Senator Johnson. He also spoke in favor of the construction of the proposed road, and assured the board that his organization would do all in its power to assist the counties in the furthering of this project.

By action of the board, Chairman John MacBain was authorized to confer with other county boards in regard to the formation of the proposed road district.

The convention, a biennial affair will be held the third week in January, 1929, and will bring to the coast city leaders of reformed Judaism throughout the country.

Declaring that California upheld her reputation as the "world's playground" during the last year, Frank G. Snook, superintendent of the state motor vehicle department, announced that 55,180 automobiles from other states and foreign countries were given tourist permits and estimated that 220,000 motorists visited the state, spending at least $2,000,000. Every state in the Union was represented among the visiting motorists, as well as eighteen foreign countries among them England, China, France Belgium, Japan, Mexico, Australia and New Zealand.

Citizens of Newport Beach, went to the polls recently to decide whether or not they wish to spend $500,000 in improving Newport Bay. The bond issue is up as a municipal project. Voters in the county have twice refused to improve the harbor, and now Newport Beach is ready to do the work itself.

Members of the El Dorado County Chamber of Comerce, Placerville, are planning a drive for 500 members for this organization. It is hoped that a great deal of work in the county can be completed in the new season.

George Washington

No life it would seem is too great, too noble and too generous to escape the attacks of a type of human maggot, who, like the worms which destroy the finest and most exquisite carvings of antiquity and leave them only a pile of filth, would labor to tear down what they can never hope to build. Gladstone, the "Grand Old Man of England," one of the greatest statesmen the world has produced, is assailed after his body is laid to rest in Westminster, that the world may hear if even for a day the name of a commentator who would otherwise have been sunk in the dephts of obscurity where he belongs and to which he will return ages before the name of Gladstone is forgotten.

So with Washington. Like one who would cast a Rembrandt or a Rubens into the fire that by its light his own ugly visage might be illuminated for an ephemeral moment, we have those in this country—those too who should most generous in praise, who to get their own names babbled for a few brief days, will seek to defile and drag through the mire even the father of his country. Tearing all that is beautiful and good away and leaving only the blank wall, they plume themselves as leaders of thought—they have demonstrated something new—there has been a blank wall there all the time.

But Americans are too great a people to be carried away by such propaganda. George Washington still stands as one of the greatest men of history, Even though all the belittling things which his recent critics have charged against him were true, and we must have better authority than the type of persons who have thus far been active in this line—even if these things were true, still compared with the great things which we know are true, they sink into insignificance, and Washington still stands "first in the hearts of his countrymen."

The 'Small Town' Spirit

Very often we hear comments on what is called "small town stuff" and the so-called "mossbacks" come in for a large share of criticism. Very seldom, if ever, have we heard anyone rally to the support of the "mossback." But we have heard it said that "There is so much good in the worst of us, and so much bad in the best of us, that it ill befits the best of us to speak ill of the rest of us." So perhaps there is even a little that is good about the much maligned gentleman of the fossil variety.

The manager of a large corporation the other day stated that Redwood City would never amount to much. This was a surprise to us, as we had always rather considered this pleasant village a sort of important cog in the universe. "No," he stated, "there is too much brotherly feeling and kindness among the people of Redwood City. There are not enough really selfish people here. Business is cruel and selfish, and to get ahead an individual or a community must be both cruel and selfish. Here we have too few of the grasping self-centered rapacious businessmen to make the town progress—the people are all friendly and easy going."

The idea was new to us, but the more we think of it the better pleased we are that we have some "mossbacks" left and that all our neighbors and associates are not the kind of people whom this gentleman says make towns grow.

Progress is fine, and we have seen great advances within the last few years, but thanks be, we have still a friendly, neighborly city where the human side of life has not altogether been burned away by the fierce fires of greed and rapacity. When business takes the place of friendship, and cold, hard calculation supplants brotherly love, then, perhaps, things will boom—but then we will hie our way to a more insignificant spot where fossils and mossbacks can dwell together in unity.

Travelers from abroad are in accord in their statements to the effect that in no country is telephone service found which can be compared with the United States.

New York City calls over 6,000,000 times a day—more calls than are placed in all of Great Britain.

Boston has twice as many telephones as Paris. And so on through the list of cities in the United States.

There are eight states in our forty-eight states which have more telephones than the entire Republic of France.

This has all been brought about by private initiative and enterprise which is just the reverse of government ownership as in vogue in Europe, when it comes to giving service to the public.

RECORDS OF SHERIFF'S OFFICE FULL OF GREAT INTEREST AND ADVENTURE

Through the kindness of Dennis E. O'Keefe, owner of the Times-Gazette, San Mateo County's oldest established publication, permission was recently given to the writer to review the old files of the above-named paper and glean some very interesting data relative to the different county officials who have served the people of San Mateo County so faithfully.

While all of the activities of the various county officials furnished interesting reading, those of the sheriff's office stood out most prominently, of the fact that this office is regarded as being the most important, and the one which is most hazardous and held responsible in protecting the county's population toward public safety.

The records of the various sheriffs all depicted serious problems, which were won, many of them, under very trying conditions.

Never knowing when a call would come in, that would mean the sacrificing of their lives, in order to curb crime and trouble, the sheriffs who served the people of San Mateo County deserved much credit for the way in which they handled the duties of this important office.

Early history depicts San Mateo County's organization in 1856, three years preceding the establishment of this paper and which will soon be receiving congratulations upon its 68th birthday anniversary.

The first man to file his bond as sheriff of San Mateo County was John W. Ackerson, the filing of which dates back to November 7, 1856, and his induction into office the first Monday in January, 1857.

Commencing at this time and following through the years until 1893 the term of office for sheriff only covered a period of two years.

At the termination of Sheriff Ackerson's term he sought re-electiin, his opponent being Silas Hovious.

Records show that Hovious beat Ackerson by only 7 votes, the total vote cast by the county for both men only being 915.

Following Hovious' administration from 1859 to 1861, Silas H. Bowman was next elected by the people, his term of office lasting from 1861 to 1863.

Then in his footsteps came Joseph H. Keith, whose term expired October 2, 1865.

Bowman and Keith were called the "Civil War" sheriffs, appropriately named on account of serving the people during the Civil War of 1861 to 1865.

P. W. Lathrop next took up the reins of curbing crime, his services as sheriff lasting for three terms—1865 to 1872.

John E. Edgar, who served the people, following Lathrop's administration, also enjoyed three terms of office from the years 1872 to 1878.

George W. Green next became the people's choice for sheriff, his term of office being shortened by his untimely drowning in Redwood creek, Thanksgiving day, November, 1881.

H. W. Walker was appointed to fill Green's unexpired term which brought his services up to January, 1883, after which John Henry Hatch was elected by the people to serve for two terms—1883 to 1887.

William H. Kinne was next in line of service, the period of his administration being for three consecutive terms—1887 to 1893.

William P. McEvoy, who was the first sheriff to serve under the new ruling of the four-year term, commenced his duties in 1893 and was shot to death by Thomas Flannely during his fourth year of office—1897.

Josiah Mansfield, under-sheriff at the time of McEvoy's death, and who also was wounded by Flannely, was appointed by the supervisors to fill out McEvoy's unexpired term.

Following its termination, Mansfield sought a term of his own, and was elected, serving on through the years until 1907.

At this time Robert S. Chatham become the people's choice for sheriff, his services lasting from 1907 until 1911.

Josiah Mansfield's good record still being in the minds of the people won him another term of office following Chatham's administration, which embraced the year's of 1911 to 1915.

Michael Sheehan then won the election as sheriff and served for two terms from 1915 to 1923, he being succeeded by H. W. Lampkin, whose death occurred from an accident a year from the day he entered into office, January, 1924.

Thomas C. McGovern, present sheriff, was then appointed by the supervisors to fill Lampkins' unexpired term, which lasted from January, 1924, to January, 1927.

McGovern aspired for a term of office of his own during the 1926 state and county election and won the office as sheriff at the primary election, his majority vote over his opponent being 6101.

With the large primary vote of 11,698 and the big complimentary vote of 11,450 attained at the general election gave Sheriff McGovern the enviable record of receiving the largest vote cast for any San Mateo County official to date, since the countys organization in 1856.

An interesting comparison may be made at this time when the early records stated that the votes

SCENE FROM another HILARIOUS REGINALD DENNY FARCE COMEDY "THE CHEERFUL FRAUD," showing at the Sequoia Theatre next Wednesday and Thursday, March 2 and 3. A Universal-Jewel Production. Adapted from the humorous novel by K. R. G. Brown.

461, respectively, the total only reaching 915 votes, which represented the amount for the entire county.

The present sheriff, years later, comes along and carries away to his credit, the flattering figures of 23,148, being the county's vote in 1926 for the winner of the sheriff's office. Statistics are always of interest, these just mentioned, being particularly so.

McGovern ranks as the sixteenth sheriff of San Mateo County, his experience of over fifteen years of service being attained when he served as deputy sheriff under the administrations of Sheriffs Robert C. Chatham, the late Josiah Mansfield, Michael Sheehan and the late H. W. Lampkin.

That his present term of office will prove a most successful one is the prediction of Sheriff McGovern's many friends who entertain hopes that when his present term closes he will serve the people throughout another term as several of his predecessors have done.

1ST PUBLIC PAY STATION OPENED IN BRIDGEPORT

New York Copied Connecticut's 1878 Innovation Seven Years Later—Now 50,000

The first public pay telephone station in the United States was established in Connecticut in 1878 by Thomas B. Doolittle, who afterwards became one of the best known engineers in the Bell System. At that time, he was the expert in charge of the Bridgeport Telephone Company's plant.

He had already devised a switchboard, when it occurred to him that some accommodations ought to be furnished to non-subscribers who desired to make use of the telephone. Accordingly, a telephone was placed in the clothes closet near the switchboard in the central office in Bridgeport.

Later on in the same year, Mr. Doolittle built the first toll line out of Bridgeport when the Fairfield, Southport and Bridgeport Telephone Company was organized. In connection with this line he established five public pay stations, one in the Bridgeport exchange, a second in the office of the Town Clerk in Fairfield, another in the grocery store at Garfield Hill, the fourth in a hotel at a summer resort called Black Rock, which was a summer bathing resort some four miles distant from Bridgeport, and the fifth in a drug store at Southport.

It was not until 1885 that the first pay station booth was established in New York City. It was made for the Bell Exchange in Fulton street by Mr. Doolittle. From this humble beginning, the telephone pay station has grown in New York until today there are over 50,000 such pay stations in New York alone.

There are over 350,000 public pay stations in the Bell System in the United States. Atlantic City leads with 1.6 such stations per hundred population. Next to Atlantic City, come Denver, Seattle, St. Louis, Washington (D. C.), Portland (Ore.), Cincinnati, Oakland (Cal.), and New Orleans, in the order named. Other cities besides New York which have a very high development of public pay stations are San Francisco, Los Angeles, Springfield (Mass.), Boston, Spokane, Salt Lake City, Houston (Tex.), Kansas City, Milwaukee, Worcester (Mass.), Lynn, Fort Worth, New Haven, Tacoma and San Antonio.

Federal Reserve Board Approves Bank Merger

Permission to consolidate the Bank of Italy and Liberty Bank of America, and operate the merged institutions under the name of the Bank of Italy, has been approved by the Federal Reserve Board, at Washington, and State Superintendent of Banks, Will C. Wood, it was announced today.

In commenting on the significance of the consolidation, James A. Bacigalupi, president of the Bank of Italy, said:

"This is a partial realization,—achieved after years of obstruction and perverse opposition,—of the worthy aspiration of the founder of our institution, A. P. Giannini. From the earliest days, when the organization embarked upon its program of statewide branch banking, it has been the purpose of Mr. Giannini to see established in every important community of California, the branch office of a strong, resourceful, democratic, progressive bank, operated for the benefit of, and controlled by, the rank and file of the people of the State.

"During the period of nearly a quarter of a century since its establishment, the Bank of Italy has experienced a steady and consistent growth, until today, with its aggregate deposits of $600,000,000, it ranks as the largest financial institution in the United States outside of New York City, and third among all the banks of the nation. The capital investment of its stockholders through the Bank of Italy and the Stockholders Auxiliary Corporation is in excess of $75,030,000, insuring for every customer the maximum of protection, and for the communities in which its branches are maintained, ample and adequate loaning power.

"Nearly 1,000,000 people throughout California are now customers of the Bank of Italy, a clientele greater than that of any other bank in the country. Its branches furnish every important and populous center of the state with complete, metropolitan banking service. Ownership of the Bank of Italy and Bancitaly Corporation is vested in upwards of 35,000 stockholders—residents of California—living in the various cities where the branch offices of the Bank of Italy are to be found. It may truly be said of the Bank of Italy, that its growth—like that of the native redwoods—is typically Californian. The 'tap roots'—the local offices of the institution—extend into practically every community, and participate, in consequence, in the vast variety and diversification of the industries and resources of California. There is no other institution more intimately identified with, or more inherently a part of, the future destiny of this great commonwealth; nor is there another, throughout the nation itself, in which the ownership is so overwhelmingly vested in the people.

"It is obvious that California is certain to gain in prestige by possessing the third largest bank in America; and as ardent Californians, we can scarcely be unmindful of whatever may redound to the benefit of the state in which the institution was cradled, and in which it has experienced such prosperity."

Adolphe Menjou in The Paramount Picture "Blonde or Brunette"

THERE'S A BIG DIFFERENCE IN HARPS AND 'HARPING'

One found happiness in "harping," the other in harps; one enjoyed tea, the other, TNT; one was blonde, the other brunette. Which doesn't exactly explain why gentlemen adore golden curls more than they do dark tresses (and this is necessarily open to argument) but does give an insight into the characters of the leading women in Adolphe Menjou's current Paramount starring vehicle, "Blonde or Brunette," which arrives at the Sequoia Theatre, February 28 and March 1.

That lovely Norse beauty, Greta Nissen, is the party of the first part; Arlette Marchal, one of France's fairest, the second; and Menjou, America's own, has a hard time in showing any preference. At least, it takes three marriages and two divorces for him to determine who is who and which is which. The deft directorial touches of Richard Rosson are at all times in evidence.

"Blonde or Brunette" is merely the record of a gentleman who looked for an "old fashioned girl," found her, and then discovered that Paris had worked a change. Then, he divorced the first and married a real Victorian who liked nothing better than to stay home and play the harp. What was he to do? Cou'll find out when "Blonde or Brunette" unfolds itself.

TELEPHONE PROGRESS IN EUROPE REPORTED

Old World Countries Have Made Increases in Facilities in Recent Years

Figures recently compiled show that Europe is now making considerable telephone progress.

The total increase in the number of telephones in Europe in 1926 over 1924 was in the neighborhood of 550,000, as compared with 501,000 for 1924 over 1923, up to that time the largest gain ever recorded. In the same years the Bell System and connecting companies in the United States reported a net gain of 818,674 in 1925 over 1924 and of 906,449 in 1924 over 1923.

In Germany, a total of 202,833 telephones was added in 1925; in Great Britain, 115,632; in France, including Algiers, 77,249; in Belgium, 21,278; in Russia, about 20,000; in Sweden, 16,276; in Holland, 11,452; and in Switzerland, 10,491. Figures for Denmark, Italy, Spain, Poland and Czechoslovakia are not yet available in total, but all show about the same proportionate gain. In Germany this figured out a little over 8 per cent, in Great Britain 9 per cent, in France and Algiers over 11 per cent, in Belgium over 15 per cent, in Russia over 13 per cent, in Sweden nearly 4 per cent, in Holland 5 per cent, and in Switzerland over 5 per cent.

When the reorganization of the telephone systems of Italy, Spain and Greece is completed, it is expected that these countries also will show a considerable net gain in the number of new telephones.

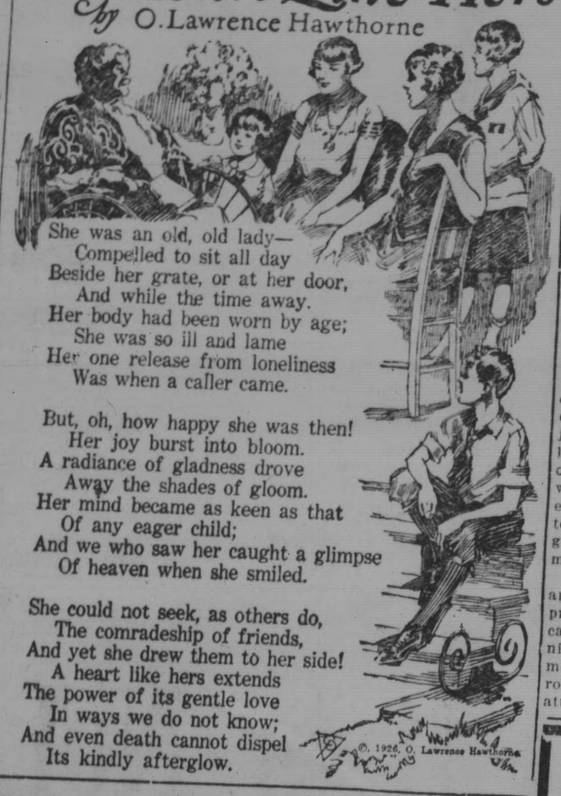
A Heart Like Hers

by O. Lawrence Hawthorne



She was an old, old lady—
Compelled to sit all day
Beside her grate, or at her door,
And while the time away.
Her body had been worn by age;
She was so ill and lame
Her one release from loneliness
Was when a caller came.

But, oh, how happy she was then!
Her joy burst into bloom.
A radiance of gladness drove
Away the shades of gloom.
Her mind became as keen as that
Of any eager child;
And we who saw her caught a glimpse
Of heaven when she smiled.

She could not seek, as others do,
The comradeship of friends,
And yet she drew them to her side!
A heart like hers extends
The power of its gentle love
In ways we do not know;
And even death cannot dispel
Its kindly afterglow.

STAR OF LONDON STAGE SUPPORTS REGINALD DENNY

Emily Fitzroy Plays in Coming Strand Feature, "Cheerful Fraud."

(Special Advance Story)

As gifted at playing light comedy roles as she is at interpreting heavy dramatic parts, Emily Fitzray, noted character actress of the screen, is one of the most versatile players before the camera.

She gives an outstanding comedy characterization in "The Cherful Fraud," Reginald Denny's latest Universal starring picture which comes to the Sequoia Theatre, Wednesday and Thursday, March 2 and 3, and ni "What Happened to Jones," a recent Denny production, contributed another comedy performance fully as outstanding yet totally unlike her characterization in the current picture.

Despite her gift for comedy, her first great part in the screen was a tragic one, that of the mountaineer mother in "Driven" the artistic triumph directed by Charles Brabin and released by Universal some four years ago.

Miss Fitroy was a star on the legitimate stage in London, and later duplicated her success in England in the New York theatre. While on the stage she did a number of screen roles and in "Driven" attracted such widespread attention that she has been devoting all of her time to pictures ever since.

"The Cheerful Fraud" was dirtcted by William A. Seiter, from the novel by K. R. G. Browne. Gertrude Olmstead, Otis Harlan, Gertrude Astor, Charles Gerrard and others are in the supporting cast.

Landscaping for the Home

Special Care To Be Taken

This is the first of a series of articles written by A. GROVES, florist, East Palo Alto. The next article will follow in the next issue of this paper.

Sometime ago there appeared in a prominent monthly an article in which the writer proposed to outline an expense budget in housekeeping for the working man, mechanic or tradesman whereby the wife on a small income could have all of the style, conveniences and comforts enjoyed by the well-to-do on an allowance of the insignificant sum of only $1000 per month which it was shown would allow for the enjoyment of an occasional visit to a movie and also to own a grand TIN LIZZY coupe on small monthly or WEAKLY payments.

In these articles on landscaping and the planting and care of the premises and the planning and care of the premises and the planning and changes and improvements of the home and its surroundings I inted to give special attention to the landscaping and improvement of the medium-sized premises such as cottages, bungalows and dwellings on lots or blocks of land in the city, country town or small holdings in the suburbs or further out from the thickly populated centers.

The first thing to consider for your home is a suitable location convenient to your work or business. If you have not already erected your house for your home you may be able to purchase already planned and built to suit your ideas. Often such a place can be purchased at a bargain, but always bear in mind that any place you secure is a bargain if it just suits you.

If you have the vacant property and intend to build, then it is best to have all of your plans completed before you let any contract or begin building, as forgotten extras are expensive, and even then for what you want or can afford it is best to have a plan drawn to a scale on paper so you can study it and know what it will be when completed.

Always where it can be done, set your cottage well back from the front line or street but still to conform to the lines of your neighbors. When you have this all to your liking, then it is time to consider what you will plant and where you will plant it, and to know how much money you expect to expend.

It is always best in your work of beautifying your home premises to settle on some plan you have worked out. In landscaping there is no hard and fast rule to follow, the main thing is to suit yourself, but always in your plant-

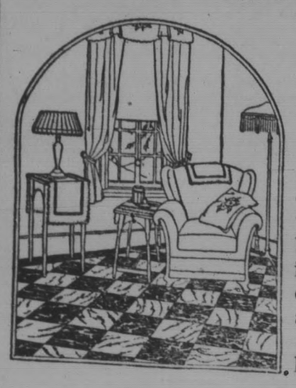
Make Your First Cost, the Whole Cost with Linoleum



A Permanent Floor

Linoleum is only as good as it is laid. Our method of cementing it down solidly over a layer of heavy deadening felt makes the linoleum a part of the floor—no more bulging, no more stretching, no more breaking. Your linoleum will not be a mere floor covering, it will become a permanent floor at once. After linoleum is laid by our improved method you are not bothered by having workmen return to trim it.

A Resilent Floor

Genuine linoleum made of cork and linseed oil on a burlap back, laid by our improved method, will give years of satisfactory service. Cementing linoleum down makes it wear evenly, and the layer of felt, acting as a cushion, absorbs the heavy blows of footsteps and lengthens the life of the linoleum appreciably. Waterproofing seams prevents damage to the linoleum from dampness.

By our method the layer of deadening felt is first pasted to the underfloor, and the linoleum in turn is pasted to the felt, all seams and edges being sealed with waterproof cement. The felt, therefore, increases the resilience, warmth, and quietness of the linoleum. Your linoleum floor, put down by our skilled layers, will be a delight to walk upon, and a decided comfort to tired feet.

Laid Linoleum $1.35 per square foot and up

Better Health Longer Life

GORGAS MEMORIAL INSTITUTE

THE PREVENTION OF TUBERCULOSIS THROUGH MEASURES DIRECTED TO CHILDHOOD INFECTION.

By F. M. Pottenger, M. D.,
Monrovia, Calif.
Member Gorgas Memorial Institute.

The development of our knowledge concerning tuberculosis during the past twenty-five years has changed our point of view. We now know that the time to fight tuberculosis is during childhood. This is the time to prevent infection and also the time to secure the arrestment of infections which do not occur before they seriously undermine the health of the individual.

Practically every individual is infected with tuberculosis sometime during his lifetime, most infections taking place during the early years. Overcoming of one infection increases the patient's ability to withstand future infections. In other words, it establishes a certain degree of resistance or immunity; but, unfortunately, it also produces a tuberculous focus which, unless it heals, remains a danger for the future health of the child.

By studying large groups of children who live in intimate contact with open tuberculosis we have learned a great deal about the way infection takes place and the manner in which the child develops an increased resistance to the bacilli.

In close contact with open tuberculosis, bacilli gain entrance to the child's body every now and then. Each infection which the child overcomes gives him power to overcome a greater number of the next time, unless the infections are too frequent and caused by too many bacilli.

Hence the dosage of bacilli and the interval between successive infections cannot be controlled, the only safe thing to do is to protect the child against danger of infection.

The problem in childhood is how to shield the child from all known sources of infection. If we live in the environment of open tuberculosis, the child should be protected at once. If infection occurs prior to removal, the child should be watched carefully to see that the infection heals. If a child known to be infected develops normally, it is a fairly good sign that the infection is not doing serious harm; but if the child becomes nervous, irritable, loses appetite, becomes a poor eater and shows nerve irritability and inability, and is subject to frequent attacks of bronchitis, a physician who understands tuberculosis should be consulted at once.

The measures that are most valuable for such children are fresh air life, healthy play in the open air, good food, long hours of sleep and an adequate amount of rest. The least exercise should be adjusted to the patient's ability to stand it, and the child should be protected from undue mental, physical and emotional strain.

Of all things which today are helping most in preventing infection in children from developing into tuberculosis are: more than the care given the preschool child, the general hygienic measures which are instituted in the homes; the education of children in the public schools; the school nurse; extra lunches supplied by school authorities; playgrounds and health board; playgrounds and parks, where play is supervised; outdoor camps; and the increased intelligence used in meeting the problems of the child who is below normal in his emotional, nervous, and physical balance.

The care of the tuberculous individual in the present generation of children will undoubtedly have a tremendous influence in reducing the amount of active tuberculosis in the next generation.

RUPTURES, OFTEN EXPLOITED BY QUACKS, ARE CURABLE WHEN TREATED EARLY

By Bertram M. Bernheim, M. D.
Baltimore, Md.
Member of Gorgas Memorial Institute.

To the layman the word rupture is synonymous with truss, and suggests some horrible condition that should not be spoken of except in secret. There are two factors responsible for this sad state of affairs: first, the usual rupture advertisement paints a horrible picture of knives and a bloody affair with weeks of suffering and an unsuccessful operation. Second, the most common rupture is that which occurs in the groin and is therefore close to the sextual organs. This gives rise to a false sense of modesty.

Consequently, many frightened individuals do not even consult a physician but are willing to go through the prime of life wearing an ill-fitting, irritating, belt-like affair, so-called truss, which irritates the skin and presses on the underlying structures to such an extent that there is a formation of dense scar tissue.

Or they consult the quacks who advertise miraculous cures of ruptures without the use of trusses, without medicine, without operation—painless, guaranteed, one hundred per cent successes, free from all danger and absolutely no loss of time from work.

In the case of the truss, the abdominal wall is in time so weakened by its pressure that the rupture is no longer held back, the patient is incapacitated and finally seeks the advice of a surgeon.

With the faker or quack it is still worse. These men inject boiling water or melted paraffin into the tissues around the rupture in the hope that scar tissue will thereby be thrown down and thus effect a cure. The only trouble is that the injected material causes such a reaction that in most cases the condition is made worse than it ever was, and it has been known to cause death.

Even when no actual harm has been done, the abdominal muscles are so injured that it is only a question of time before these patients, too, are forced to see a surgeon. And most of the so-called cures were in cases where there never was a rupture.

What would have been a comparatively safe, simple, and curative operation now carries with it a certain element of danger and difficulty. The patient is usually fifty or sixty years old, his hernia is so large that he cannot walk with comfort, he may have bronchitis, high blood pressure, or other conditions incident to old age, and his abdominal muscles are weak and scarred. For these reasons the operation is more serious than it should be and less likely to result in a cure.

Others wait until the rupture becomes strangulated, an eventuality that can happen from infancy to old age, and operation is then done—not to cure the rupture but to save the patient's life.

There is perhaps no cleaner or more beautiful operation in surgery than the repair of a hernia when done at the proper time. The danger is practically negligible. The percentage of cure in competent hands is from 96 per cent to 97 per cent, and the hospitalization is only a matter of twelve to fourteen days.

HOW SKIN GRAFTING QUICKLY HEALS RAW SURFACES

By Clarence A. McWilliams, M. D.,
New York City,

Skin grafting, a formidable undertaking in most person's minds, is relatively the simplest of operative procedures. The grafts should always be taken from the patient himself. Another person's skin may "take" occasionally, but the general result is very unecrtain.

The folds of the elbows or the thighs are the favorable sites from which to remove skin. The part grafted should be kept free from movement after the operation, to prevent dislodgment of the grafts. This necessitates confinement in bed for one week for grafts placed upon the lower extremities. When grafts are placed upon the upper extremities, face, and neck, no stay in bed is necessary.

Instead of patients refusing skin grafting they should ask that it be done ,in order to curtail the wasted expenditure of time in having dressings done. Skin grafting requires no general anaesthetic. All that is necessary is to inject novocain (a non-poisonous form of cocain) under the desired area of the skin and the slice of thin skin can be removed without the slightest sensation.

Ulcers of unhealed skin surfaces result either from defective circulation, as in the common varicose, ulcer, or from injury such as burns, or from infection, an example of which is carbuncle. The result of any one of these causes is loss of tissue, the edges of the wound bejng wide apart.

Now some of these wounds will never heal of themselves, and patients drag themselves to dispensaries and doctors' offices two or three times a week for dressings, wasting their own time and the doctor's time and perhaps throwing away the money of some institution.

Two weeks is sufficient time to demonstrate what one of these granulating wounds will do of itself. If not healing well, with good prospects of speedy recovery, the surest and quickest thing to do is to skin graft the raw surface.

For old varicose ulcers which refuse to heal, rest in bed, associated with skin grafting, is the sovereign remedy. Carbuncles, those infections dangerous to life, should be totally destroyed with the hot cautery. After the dead tissue has separated, there will remain healthy, red, strawberry-like, easily oozing, granulating surfaces.

The quickest and most cosmetic way to heal them is to supply skin grafts. It is a well known fact that wounds, when left to granulate, subsequently contract. This is most disadvantageous when the wound is situated about the joints, because the contraction of the scar will prevent the full movement of the joints. To prevent this, skin grafting should be resorted to.

PHILADELPHIA THIRD CITY WITH 2-VOLUME DIRECTORY

Philadelphia has followed the example of New York and Chicago in issuing a multiple volume telephone directory.

The new 1927 Philadelphia directory has been published in two volumes, one containing an alphabetical list of 355,000 subscribers in Philadelphia and fifty-six suburbs in Philadelphia and New Jersey, and the other with 120,000 business listings classified according to the group or industry in which they are followed.

If the new directories for the two issues were mounted they would make up 324 piles as high as the tower of the Philadelphia City Hall.

RUSSIAN TELEPHONES

Soviet Russia is planning to improve its telephone system. There are only about 171,000 telephones in Soviet Russia, which is approximately the same number as there is in the single United States city of St. Louis, although the latter city has 16.8 telephones for every 100 persons compared with one-tenth of one telephone for every 100 persons in Soviet Russia.

Selwood of Sleepy Cat

By FRANK H. SPEARMAN

STORY FROM THE START

At Sleepy Cat Doctor Carpy tells Wentworth, freighting boss, of a shooting scrape in Bartoe's gambling den, in which John Selwood, gambler, in defense of his wounded partner, Dave Tracy, shows remarkable skill and nerve.

"You'd have saved time by going half a mile higher up," commented Selwood after he had heard the story. "All the freighting outfits go there for the rock bottom. This is all right when it's dry enough. It's a mean place after a shower. And if you don't get that lead team out of that sand pretty quick, you're liable not to get them out at all."

"What should you do, stranger?" asked the settler, apparently realizing that the buckboard man knew more than he knew about the situation.

For answer, Selwood spoke sharply to the teamster, an overgrown boy, who was geeing and hawing the pole team with the sole effect of setting the fore wheels of the wagon deeper into the sand. "Drop your lines where you are," cried Selwood, "and get that lead team ashore. Don't you see the near horse is going down?"

Perceiving the awkwardness and stupidity of the young fellow, Selwood, not waiting to see his order executed, walked into the creek and, followed by the settler, splashed across to where, struggling to free their feet, the head horses were floundering. Hastening to their heels, Selwood unhooked the singletrees, threw them over the backs of the frightened horses, and, slapping them by turns smartly on the haunches, got them, splashing and struggling, ashore. Then bidding the teamster follow, he recrossed the creek, turned up the seat of his buckboard, took out, hand over hand, a length of heavy chain, passed it to the teamster to carry over, and, unhooking his own team, walked behind them, doubletree in one hand and reins in the other, across the creek. It was the work of but few minutes to fasten one end of the chain to the tongue of the stalled wagon and give directions to the two men as to where to stand and what to do. The settler was put with the team still hitched to the wagon. From the end of the wagon tongue the chain drawn taut reached ashore, where, on the sandy approach to the ford, Selwood had hooked his own team into the chain and, passing it between them, had hooked the rescued team to the chain's end.

With everything ready, Selwood gave final instructions. "Now if your king-bolt holds," he said, "we'll yank that wagon out; if it gives, you'll have to wait till you can rig another—there's a freighting outfit coming along about two hours behind,—now everybody—all together!"

Selwood loosed a stentorian yell; the six horses, galvanized by the shock, bent to the job. The boy lashed with his lines and the settler shouted. The mired wagon creaked violently, groaned, and with the wheels ploughing through the gripping sand moved uncertainly. A fresh roar from Selwood signalized the success and spurred the horses to renewed efforts; and the partly released wagon, plunging ahead, was jerked and rattled ungraciously through the sullen quicksand and up the ford approach to dry land.

The emigrant turned to his rescuer with a joyful breath of relief. "Stranger," he exclaimed, "that's a big lift! My name's Fyler—what's yours?" he asked, holding out his hand.

His benefactor was taciturn. He took the extended hand, but without enthusiasm. "That's not the first time I've helped pull a wagon out of that hole," he said good-naturedly; "it probably won't be the last. I had to be pulled out of there once, myself; nobody uses this ford that knows it. Where you headed for?"

"Sleepy Cat. Where you bound?"

"Looks as if the whole United States is heading for Sleepy Cat. Give me a hand with that buckboard, boy, and I'll be moving." The three men pulled the buckboard across the creek without difficulty, helped Selwood to hitch his team and put back his chain. Selwood explained in answer to pointed questions that he was in the freighting business and looked after the Russell and Wentworth outfits through the mountains. Fyler, in turn, said he was taking some merchandise out to open a store in Sleepy Cat.

Selwood, answering laconically a rapid flow of questions, was glad to be ready to drive on. He gathered his reins to step into the buckboard. As he lifted his foot, with one hand on the dash and the other on the seat, to do so, his eyes fell on Fyler's first wagon, standing twenty yards away. The canvas opening at the hind end was parted and to his great surprise he saw that at the moment it framed the face of a girl of eighteen or twenty years. She did not see Selwood, and he stood motionless, staring at the unexpected sight.

She was bareheaded, with her hair parted in the middle and drawn plainly over her temples. On her neck a simple kerchief rested loosely above a simple dress. Women-folk were not uncommon in emigrant trains; indeed, they were the rule. Yet Selwood paused as if petrified at the ordinary sight. Unluckily for him, his horses, less interested in the situation, champed at their bits and tried to start. More even than the clear profile had promised was revealed in the full face; it was mere girlhood—simplicity and frank innocence—but it made Selwood catch his breath.

When her eyes fell on Selwood she looked rather quickly away and the parted canvas flap softly closed. Selwood stepped gingerly up into the buckboard and settled himself in his seat. The impatient horses leaped ahead. He did not attempt to look back.

Selwood reached Sleepy Cat late that night. His tired team headed without guiding hand for the Russell and Wentworth horse barn.

Selwood threw his reins to a waiting hostler. He got stiffly down after his long ride, tipped up the lazy-back seat, took out and stuffed into a side pocket of his coat the good-luck girl's shoe, and walked forward. As he passed the open door of the office he saw the barn boss, McAlpin, in confab with a little woman sitting in the chair at the desk. Near them, listening, stood an overgrown boy of twenty. The woman was talking earnestly and rapidly. Selwood was hungry, dust-covered, and tired, and without speaking to McAlpin he passed out through the gangway doors and started for his room at Doctor Carpy's hotel.

McAlpin in the barn office stood profoundly attentive to the story of the little woman sitting at the desk, with a handkerchief, much knotted, in her hands and with great trouble expressed in her tear-stained eyes.

The barn boss was plainly interested in the tale the strange woman was pouring into his ear. Of the men that profess they have no time to listen to other people's troubles, James McAlpin never was one. He had almost a morbid flair for other people's troubles; and the worse they were the more he—I ought not to say enjoyed them—but the more closely they held him. He had come from far across the sea and crossed forbidding deserts to reach the Great American West, penniless but thrifty, and fortified with the resolve to weep with the weepers and rejoice with the glad. As a Scotsman, nature had fitted him for the difficult role of being all things to all men, and as he listened in the stuffy, strong-smelling, cluttered-up little office of the big division barn of the Russell and Wentworth Freighting company—the first barn, by the way, ever built in Sleepy Cat—as he looked from the little wisp of a woman, weeping and pouring out her woes before him, to the husky, overgrown twenty-year-old son at her side—sheepish now and hang-dog in looks—McAlpin felt that in coolness and confidence in himself he was pretty nearly master of the situation; and he looked his part.

"What's that, Mrs. McCracken?" he demanded, suddenly eyeing the woman, and throwing more emphasis into the words as he repeated the sharp question purely for effect. "What's that you say? Moses was gambling? Why, no! I couldn't say the boy was gambling when he lost that money. If it's gambling, two men have got to have a chance—don't you know that, Mrs. McCracken?" McAlpin spoke fast, because Mrs. McCracken herself had hardly checked her own sorrowful tale in the interval; she was, in fact, though weighing under ninety pounds, the first woman he had ever met that could talk faster than he could. "That boy didn't have a chance," insisted McAlpin, "he was just plain robbed—that's what I call it, robbed. Was the six hundred all the money you had, Mrs. McCracken?"

"Every cent in the world," wept the woman, "and Moses knew better than to go near a gambling house."

As a distributing point for a widespread mountain territory, Sleepy Cat even at this time boasted trading and supply houses out of all proportion in size and importance to its population, and these stores, with frontier disregard of fire hazard, were housed mostly in one long block. In that block could be found the widely known establishment of John Cole—the tall, spare brother of the town blacksmith; the long, rambling store of Alexis Roubidoux, the French trader, with nearly all the business of the Gunlock and the Falling Wall reservations—Roubidoux with the squaw wife, the brown toupee, the gray glass eye, and the dyed mustache and goatee.

In this row, too, were the Klickbusch brothers, Chris and Otto—big men with bristling mustaches and perspiring foreheads, always hustling, always sweating—who controlled most of the supply business from the mining camps at Horse Head and Thief River, north and south. Last of all in that block was the man whom nobody knew, not even his own clerks, Van Tambel, the silent Dutch trader, tall as a Pomeranian, ungainly as a Hollander—the man who heard all and said nothing. He had the Mormon trade.

A riot of celebration had been loosed on the great day to greet the advance guard of the coming railroad. The pioneers and adventurers within a radius of two hundred miles had congregated in their picturesqueness to do the occasion honor.

Patiently, McAlpin waited again for Moses' story of how that morning his mother had given him six hundred dollars to pay for and bring back the team of mules. Moses, on his way, had met an entertaining man who had come from the same town in Iowa as the McCrackens—at this point McAlpin ground his teeth. The man had volunteered to go with him to help bring back the team. He had offered, incidentally, to show Moses where the new round-house was to be built. They had stopped in at an interesting place where different games were being played, and Moses, in earnest and repeated endeavor to pick the right one of three cards, had gradually wagered and finally lost the six hundred.

McAlpin had already heard the story once; but it was his custom, if he could manage it, to hear a particularly harrowing tale twice. He listened to the second recital with the same sharp ejaculations, the same screwing and twisting of his features and his heels, and the same angry jerking of his head, with which he had absorbed Moses' story the first time.

"Now I'll tell you," he said domineeringly and to cut off further discussion, "I'll go with you to where they took your money and see what can be done."

Calling a hostler front, McAlpin, with Moses, walked rapidly down the ragged highway that was to serve as Sleepy Cat's principal street, in the direction of what was already known as the River quarter, which had gained an evil precedence in mountain story as the resort of hard men and scenes of violence.

McAlpin had a very definite idea of the general direction in which Moses had parted with his money, and took him directly down toward the river, talking and gesticulating as fast as he walked. Reaching the suspected district, McAlpin slowed and pointed from a conservative distance to one disreputable joint after another, asking his companion whether this or that place looked like the one he had been taken into.

Moses, confident at first, found himself hazy when it came to identifying the precise scene of his disaster. With his guide he walked clear to the camping-grounds without success, and McAlpin, on the way back to the stable, was growing very impatient when Moses, of a sudden, stopped his companion and pointed to a man just going into a large and quite pretentious frame saloon.

"That's the fellow," he exclaimed eagerly.

"What fellow?"

"Just going in there—he dealt the cards. And that's the place!" whispered Moses with excitement.

McAlpin looked at the place pointed out and turned a hard stare on his companion. "Man alive!" he cried, "what kind of a fool are you to pick out the worst place 'tween St. Joe and Sacramento to leave your money in? Come along to the barn!"

"Ain't you going to talk to 'im, as you said you would?" asked Moses timidly, but dreading to face his mother again.

"Talk in there?" echoed McAlpin scornfully. "Do I want to get knifed? Not yet. Come along. You're lucky you didn't get knocked on the head and thrown into the river. That's Bunty Bartoe's place."

McAlpin returned to the barn out of humor. He wasted little time, when he got back to the office, in explaining things but, leaving Moses to take the brunt of the storm, became very busy with some mules just being brought into the barn by teamsters putting them up for the night. It was nearly supper time, too, and McAlpin, to avoid further discussion in the office, dodged out the back way for something to eat. A hearty meal restored pretty well his naturally placid outlook on life; but when he got back to the barn this was upset again by the spectacle of Mrs. McCracken sitting alone in the twilight of the rough office, silent and woebegone. Another long talk resulted in an opening of his heart again, and ended in his telling her to go get her supper and come back. He would see, meantime, whether something more might be done.

"If only my poor brother William—William Pardaloe—was here, Mr. McAlpin—he'd make these thieves hunt their holes," sobbed Mrs. McCracken. "I'd not have to ask nobody for help if I had William."

"Well, if William, whoever he is, was here, Mrs. McCracken," retorted McAlpin tartly, "he could have the job for all of me!"

Mrs. McCracken could eat no supper, but she spent thirty minutes back in camp weeping, and then rose to a resolution of her own. With Moses as a guide she resolved to seek the men that had robbed Moses—and did so.

Naturally, she got scant recognition, and was hardly given time to introduce herself and tell her story, before Moses was thrown bodily into the street and Mrs. McCracken was strongly urged, under threat of arrest, out after him. Neither storms nor tears availed; the two arguments that had always subdued her dead husband had no weight in the River quarter.

Baffled and disheartened, she returned with her son to pester McAlpin and, having cornered him, told of the fresh indignities she had suffered in her efforts to reclaim her own.

To her surprise, the barn boss was angry at her. He told her flatly she had disobeyed his orders, ruined everything; and on this the two joined issue.

It was in the very midst of their animated discussion that a well-set, leisurely man walked unobtrusively into the office. This was John Lefever, head wagon boss for Russell and Wentworth, just in with a long string of wagons, west-bound. With feet of small size and notwithstanding the largeness of his frame, Lefever walked gingerly and with hardly any noise. He carried in his hand a long whip; this he placed in the rack quietly in order that he might lose nothing of the talk going on behind him; and, to emphasize his ostensible indifference to the subject-matter, he whistled softly to himself as he fingered the other whips in the rack and, having selected one to try out, turned slowly around, the prey to curiosity, to see what manner of person was matching Jim McAlpin for once in fast talking. Having satisfied himself on this point by a brief glance, Lefever started for the door leading into the stable.

McAlpin, pressed for help and still indignant at Mrs. McCracken's new story, was not minded to let him escape. He darted between the big fellow and the door. "No—stop, John, look here a minute. I want you to hear this!"

Lefever saw there was no escape, and he was forced to hear the whole story. "Well," he asked, at the conclusion, "what are you going to do about it?"

"What can I do? It's Bunty Bartoe's place, John. Can I afford to get dumped into the river?"

Lefever, as if disclaiming personal responsibility, moved out into the barn. But McAlpin hung on to him. Then Lefever said something, whatever it was, in a low tone that caused McAlpin to lower his tone. A whispered conference followed. "Do you think it would be all right to ask him, John?" urged McAlpin, as Lefever turned to get away.

"If he doesn't want to do it, he won't do it, will be?" snapped Lefever.

"Would he get angry with me asking him, d'y' think?" called McAlpin after his retreating friend.

"If he does I'll get your job, won't I? No! He won't get angry."

Lefever was half way down to the stalls. McAlpin stopped long enough at the office door to tell the "Mrs." and Moses to hide—speaking sternly to Moses. Then grabbing his cap he hustled into the street.

Head down, and only glancing, without lifting it, from under the short visor of his cap at the men in twos and threes and scattered groups—teamsters, emigrants, frontiersmen, adventurers—that loitered in the open spaces or moved aimlessly along the middle of the street, McAlpin made straight up the hill above the River quarter toward a large frame structure set some fifty feet back from the street below the brow of the hill and isolated. A broad sign, high above the large double doors of the building—thrown wide open now—reading "John Selwood, Gambler," left no doubt as to the nature of the owner's business.

David Tracy—the old "partner," afterward so seriously wounded—whom Selwood had originally set up in the establishment, had been given carte blanche—and used it—in spending money to make his gambling hall a western place to be talked about.

With Tracy disabled, young Selwood had assumed entire responsibility for the place. And as a further defiance to any aggrieved enemies of the Sanger-Boyd following, Selwood's name, at Tracy's behest, though against Selwood's wishes, had been conspicuously placed above the doors.

Selwood's was known from the Missouri river almost to the Sierras as an exceptional place and one of repute—where there was no saloon and no disreputable adjunct, and none near it; where no one was asked to play, and where no limit was placed on the player.

A City Hall Extraordinary

PHILADELPHIA is a big city. Obviously a big city hall was needed to care for its affairs.

Accordingly, work was begun in the early seventies, at the cross-roads of Broad and Market streets, on a monstrous structure which has proved to be the most strikingly outstanding civic building in all America.

Built of Massachusetts marble on a granite base, it is rich in exterior decoration. Constructed in the form of a great hollow square, it has a very large central court. Including this court, it occupies about six and one-half acres of ground.

The design is such that while it appears to be but four stories in height, the interior is divided into eight floors, composing some fourteen and one-half acres of floor space, which is cut up into more than five hundred rooms.

Its ninety-foot-high walls are surmounted by entrance pavilions which are flanked by corner pavilions. A great central tower rises out of the court. This tower is ninety feet square at the base and is crowned by a thirty-seven-foot statue of William Penn—the founder of the city, making the maximum height, some say, about five hundred and forty-eight feet.

Four giant clock dials, having minute hands eleven feet long and weighing upwards of two hundred pounds each, tell the time to passers-by. The time is kept by a master clock, said to be both vibration and temperature proof, located one hundred and forty feet below the dials.

Penn's hat is surrounded by a row of electric lights which, 'tis claimed, are visible thirty miles away on dark nights.

The American Dog Derby

FOR some reason or other most every region of importance supports an annual festival of some sort to which the local inhabitants can go, disport themselves and brag about the home town. These celebrations take many forms, but it remained for the little town of Ashton, Idaho, just west of Yellowstone park, to inaugurate the American Dog Derby, in 1917.

The country roundabout is a great seed-producing section—car load after carload of seed potatoes, seed peas, seed wheat, seed oats and seed barley being shipped out to states far and near. During the preceding year Ashton carried off a very generous portion of the prizes at the state seed show. A bountiful fall of snow made the growing of these crops possible and the American dog derby was decided upon in the nature of a jubilation event.

The course is approximately twenty-five miles long, in the shape of a loop eight and one-third miles around, Ashton, being located at the beginning and end of the loop, the contestants passing through the town three times during the course of the race. Originally, the dogs were all native grown and used to haul mail and supplies to the surrounding camps and ranches when the depth of the snow made this necessary. Now, however, this annual affair has gained such notoriety that dog teams are raised specifically for racing purposes, many dogs being imported for breeding purposes.

Nowadays practically every "kid" in Ashton has his dog and sled and enthusiasm waxes high as the day for the derby approaches.

Chicago's Sewage Treatment Plant

THE tremendous importance, staggering magnitude and surprising cost involved in the satisfactory and economic disposition of sewage in large cities is brought home by the great "treatment" plant about completed on the north rim of Chicago by the Sanitary District of Chicago.

The method of collecting sewage is well standardized—the sewage from stores, homes and factories drains into small laterals, which drain into larger or main sewers, but the method of disposition varies according to local conditions.

The Sanitary District of Chicago embraces the city proper, the suburban and manufacturing areas between the Indiana and Wisconsin state lines and similar areas northwest, west and southwest of the city. The estimated volume of sewage and industrial waste in this district averaged 835,000,000 gallons daily in 1925.

When this new treatment plant is placed in operation the sewage passed to it will be put through aerated filters, where it will be chemically treated, then run through settling tanks and grit chambers and finally piped to another plant, where it will be dried and sacked preparatory to being sold as fertilizer.

When completed this plant and the necessary connecting sewers, pumps, etc., shall have cost the taxpayers something like $13,500,000, and will be the latest improved scientific sewage treatment plant in the United States. Designed for a population of 800,000, it will serve an area covering 62 square miles.

Several smaller plants serve other sections of the city.

Modern Business Terms

In England terms "share" and "stock" are both used, but with a distinct difference. Americans use the terms indiscriminately or in combination as shares of stock, but always have in mind one general class of security. The English plan, on the other hand, declares each share to be equal in amount to each other share. When these shares become fully paid they may be converted into stock, but not otherwise. Stock may be reconverted into fully paid shares.

Drugs Excite the Kidneys, Drink Water

Take Salts at First Sign of Bladder Irritation or Backache

The American men and women must guard constantly against kidney trouble because we often eat too much rich food. Our blood is filled with acids which the kidneys strive to filter out; they weaken from overwork, become sluggish, the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness or a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache, or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or if you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, begin drinking lots of good soft water and get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer are a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

Covered Wagon Pioneer Quickly Restored to Health

Was So Weak Could Scarcely Use Arms or Legs. Sacramento Resident a Victim of "Flu," Loses Weight and Vitality. Finds Long-Sought Relief. Strength Restored. Praises Tanlac.

Pioneer blood flows in the veins of Frank Rikert, Box 1035, R. R. 10, Sacramento, Calif., a prominent stockman who trekked over the rough, hazardous trails from Illinois in the early sixties. But even his brawn, muscle and splendid health broke under the strain of modern living. "Flu" left its mark and threatened his life.

"I didn't care whether I lived or died, I felt so badly," said Mr. Rikert, "when I began taking Tanlac. My strength had vanished, sapped by the 'Flu.' My arms and legs were so weak that they were almost useless. I couldn't even turn over in bed without help, so completely undermined was my strength and vitality.

"One night my wife saw the Tanlac advertisement in the paper and urged me to try it. I bought a bottle and started taking it, and I felt better right off. In a few weeks I was able to do all my work. Not only did my weakness disappear, but I actually gained twenty pounds, and I have felt fine ever since.

"Yes, sir, I firmly believe that Tanlac saved my life. Naturally, I'm so enthusiastic about Tanlac I am telling all my friends it's a great medicine and I'll praise it as long as I live."

Tanlac helps conquer ailments and builds up strength in famished bodies. It banishes pain and frees the system of poison caused by constipation and sluggish liver. It is Nature's own remedy made from roots, barks and herbs according to the famous Tanlac formula.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

President Asks Powers to Agree on Further Cut in Naval Armament.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

ON INSTRUCTION from President Coolidge, the American ambassadors at London, Paris, Rome and Tokyo presented last Thursday to the governments of Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan a memorandum suggesting that they "empower their delegates at the forthcoming meeting of the preparatory commission for the disarmament conference at Geneva to negotiate and conclude at an early date an agreement further limiting naval armament, supplementing the Washington treaty on that subject, and covering the classes of vessels not covered by that treaty."

The President in a special message to congress explained the considerations that moved him to take this action, and included the text of the note to the powers. In this he said the American delegates at Geneva would have "full powers to negotiate definitely regarding measures for further naval limitation, and, if they are able to reach an agreement with the representatives of the other signatories of the Washington treaty, to conclude a convention embodying such agreement, in tentative or final form as may be found practicable."

The American government and people, the President said, "are convinced that competitive armament constitutes one of the most dangerous contributing causes of international suspicion and discord, and is calculated eventually to lead to war."

Despite the hope of the United States to complete the work of the Washington treaty and extend limiting treaties to cover cruisers, destroyers and submarines, the message continued, "far-reaching building programs have been laid down by certain powers, and there has appeared in our own country, as well as abroad, a sentiment urging naval construction on the ground that such construction is taking place elsewhere."

PRESIDENTIAL campaign politics and the third term problem came out into the open last week, and probably will stay there for some time to come. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia university, a wet Republican and for long a potential candidate, started things with an address in New York in the course of which he asserted that in his judgment Calvin Coolidge would refrain from injecting the third term issue into the campaign of 1928 and would not be a candidate to succeed himself. He declared that other Republican leaders throughout the country felt as he did and that Mr. Coolidge's common sense would keep him from seeking a renomination. Doctor Butler's speech dealt with issues he believes will have to be met in 1928 and told the Republicans that the party would face the fight of its life and that victory would go to that party which stood squarely on three issues—prohibition, farm relief and foreign policy.

The lid thus being taken off, Beck of Wisconsin, insurgent Republican, introduced a resolution in the house, declaring it to be "the sense" of that body that congress is opposed to a third presidential term. Speaker Nicholas Longworth, who is supposed to have presidential ambitions, in an address before the women's patriotic conference on national defense in Washington, caustically criticized the administration's economy program, especially as it affected the navy.

The leading argument of those in the house who opposed any appropriation for the cruisers was that another limitation of armament conference might be held in the comparatively near future, and that, under the circumstances, we should proceed with no new actual building program," said Mr. Longworth. "To my mind, that argument refutes itself. I have not the slightest doubt that it was our commanding strength and generous willingness to make great sacrifices that brought about the successful results of the Washington conference.

"Today we are in no such position of superiority but rather in a position of inferiority. We must then take up the question of a new conference on the limitation of armament, not as a nation willing to make great sacrifices in the cause of peace, but as a nation begging others to make sacrifices themselves."

Senator Borah responded to Doctor Butler's challenge concerning prohibition by admitting that was a proper issue in the coming campaign and asserting that the Republican party declare itself unmistakably on that question. He said this would be done by the voters themselves and therefore the issue should be presented in the states and districts prior to the election of delegates so that the delegates might be chosen in accordance with the popular view. This proposal sent shivers down the spines of many Republican leaders.

Henry Ford contributed his bit by visiting the White House and then informing the correspondents that he had told the President that the country generally is "solid as a rock" and that existing prosperity will not only continue but increase. He added that he considered the President "more popular with the people of the United States than ever before," but he refused to discuss the President's chances for renomination.

AT THIS writing it appears likely that the McNary-Haugen farm relief measure will be passed by congress and that it will be vetoed by President Coolidge because he still considers it a price-fixing measure and therefore economically unsound. The President was said to favor rather the Curtis-Crisp bill, which contains no equalization fee provision and which Frank O. Lowden condemns for that reason as "wholly missing the point of legislation which we have been advocating." Farm bloc leaders in Washington said if Mr. Coolidge vetoed the McNary-Haugen bill, the corn belt would rally to Lowden for the Presidential nomination.

One emergency agricultural relief bill was passed by congress and signed by the President. It appropriates $10,000,000 to be expended in co-operation with the states in the eradication of the corn borer.

IN ALL likelihood the world court has ceased to be a political issue and the United States is definitely out of that tribunal. Last week the State department received from Great Britain and two other major powers, not named, notification that they were not prepared to accept the American reservations unconditionally. President Coolidge announced in his Kansas City speech that unless all the nations adhering to the court protocol accepted the American reservations without change he would not again submit the matter to the senate and the United States would remain outside the court. It was stated at the White House last week that Mr. Coolidge had not changed his mind in regard to this.

MEMBERS of the senate committee on privileges and elections again failed to agree on a report in the case of Frank L. Smith, senator-designate from Illinois. A majority of the committee seemed to be in favor of recommending the seating of Smith, but several, including the Democrats, thought that evidence as to the facts in the case should be presented before a report was made to the senate. One may repeat the prediction, made several weeks ago, that the matter will not be settled before the present congress comes to an end on March 4.

FOR the second time President Coolidge withdrew the nomination of William J. Tilson of Atlanta to be federal judge for the middle district of Georgia. The senate was about to vote on the nomination and rejection was certain. Senator Harris of Georgia led the opposition, saying that Tilson was personally obnoxious to him. The judiciary committee had twice reported adversely on the nomination.

PORTUGAL enjoyed one of its periodic revolutionary movements last week. The revolt started with the military in Oporto and spread to Lisbon, the capital. There was fighting in both cities and considerable bloodshed, and before the week ended it was announced that the affair was practically over, the government having suppressed the rebellion. During the fighting in Lisbon the American legation was riddled by bullets and Minister Fred M. Dearing was forced to abandon it. The revolt was directed primarily against General Carmona, the president-dictator.

UNDETERRED by protests from both the Cantonese and the northern Chinese, Great Britain went ahead with her preparations for the defense of the international concession at Shanghai, and the Gloucestershire and Durham regiments, having reached Hongkong, proceeded to Shanghai as did a number of British warships. Dispatches from Hankow, headquarters of the Cantonese, said Eugene Chen, nationalist foreign minister, had resumed conversations with Owen O'Malley, the British charge d'affaires, and that an amicable agreement might result. One reason for this may have been the reported reverses suffered by the Cantonese troops in Chekiang province, which halted their progress toward Shanghai. Marshal Sun Chuan-fang, allied with the northerners, was said to have captured Chuchow.

Much of the speech from the throne at the reopening of the British parliament was devoted to the Chinese tangle, and while both the king and Prime Minister Baldwin gave assurance that Great Britain desired a peaceful settlement by negotiation, the latter made it plain the government was determined to protect its nationals in China and would land troops at Shanghai if this was made advisable by local conditions, regardless of any protests.

Secretary of State Kellogg made an effort to solve the problem of Shanghai by proposing that that city be excluded from the zone of warfare between the Chinese factions, but this was not considered favorably by either the nationalists or the northerners, and of foreign nations only Japan gave it approval. Premier Mussolini announced that Italy would support Great Britain's program and sent a warship and marines to the scene of action. The transport Chaumont, carrying 1,200 American marines from San Diego, arrived at Honolulu and proceeded eastward, for either Guam or China. About six hundred American missionaries have taken refuge in Shanghai and more arrive from the interior daily.

THERE was heavy fighting in and about Chinandega between the Nicaraguan government forces and the rebels. The latter occupied the city but were driven out after Lee Mason and William Brookes, American aviators in the service of President Diaz, had raided and bombed them. The city was practically destroyed by bombardment and flames. A dispatch from Managua said Doctor Sacasa, leader of the liberals, was preparing to accept the government's peace terms or withdraw from the country.

FOR some two months following March 1 President Coolidge and his personal and official household will occupy the Patterson mansion on Dupont Circle, that residence having been selected as the temporary White House while the executive mansion is undergoing repairs. The house is one of the show places of Washington and is now owned by Mrs. Elmer Schlesinger, the daughter of the late Robert W. Patterson, editor of the Chicago Tribune.

YOSHIHITO, the late emperor of Japan, was buried last week with all the prescribed ancient rites, lasting for several days. A million and a half persons gathered in Tokyo to see the funeral procession, and in the crush two were killed and hundreds injured. After the ceremonies in a specially constructed pavilion, the body was taken by rail to Asakawa and placed in the tomb at the foot of a nearby hill.

Mace Is Symbol of Authority in House

A ceremonial mace, the symbol of constituted authority rooted in the customs of the ancient Roman republic, is as much a part of the sittings of the house of representatives as the members are themselves.

Whenever the house is in session, it is mounted in a marble pedestal to the right of the speaker's chair. If the members are meeting as a committee of the whole on the state of the Union, it stands in a lower pedestal near by.

It is never unguarded, and for more than eight years has been in the custody of A. C. Jordan of Lyons, Kan., tall, stalwart, genial assistant sergeant at arms, whose duty is to maintain order on the floor.

Made in 1842 of ebony fasces, or rods, three feet long, representing the states, bound with thongs of silver and surmounted with a silver globe and spreading eagle, the mace of the house represents powers rarely exercised, including summary expulsion of a disorderly member.

Usually, when the assistant sergeant at arms is called upon to restore order, he is able to do so merely by marching through the disturbed aisles carrying the mace or by holding it over two excited members. If a misbehaving member fails to heed that display of authority, however, he may lay it beside him. That act automatically expels him, and he would have to obtain a formal reinstatement.

FLORAL PRINTS FOR HOUSEWEAR; SUPPLE SILHOUETTE IN FAVOR

SOME airs the erstwhile simple housedress is putting on nowadays! Even the materials from which it is made are delightfully camouflaging in appearance, especially the highly mercerized cottons whose colorful floral prints duplicate in patterning and in sheen the more expensive silks. When it comes to laundering, these handsome prints prove themselves not only lovable, but tubable to the point of perfection.

Pretty Washable House Dress.

The compose mode is given a place of first importance in the styling of the "last word" washable frocks. To the "I-always-make-my-own-wash-dresses" enthusiast here is a timely hint—when you buy a dress length of fancy print or gay gingham, be sure to purchase a solid colored material for the pockets, necktie, collar, cuffs and other trimming details. Then again choose a rather "fussy" pattern, at least see to it that there be no suggestion of the at-one-time popular bungalow apron style. Rather select a model as here pictured, with circular skirt, fancy tie-collar 'n' everything.

Cotton fabrics were never so alluring as at this very moment. Highly mercerized weaves patterned in foulard suggestions are among most recent showings in the wash-goods section. One of these can't-tell-from-silk fabrics which glorifies the colorful cotton print was chosen for the attractive daytime washable frock in the picture. Its monotone color trim expresses an outstanding style note.

Sprightly floral prints prevail in spring cottons. Among charming new washable materials cotton crepes are shown patterned in tiny blossoms with a tweed-like background, batistes in alluring flower designs on a white base, voiles beflowered in resplendent coloring and the latest effects are printed linens which include both neat conventional motifs or themes as brilliantly colorful as one might make.

Organdie trimmings lend a charming trimming to materials of heavier weave. Pique, also organdie in pure white are used for collar, cuffs and pocket on gay ginghams.

What with a notably "different" play on color and a changing mood of the silhouette, it is just one thrill after another along the pathway of spring and summer fashions.

Especially are new color combinations and effects being whirled into the arena of the mode at a dizzying rate. Fashionists are defining color in the plural. This color compose idea, which is the underlying principle of most of the fashionable color schemes, interprets two methods, that of combining various tones and tints of the same color, or using contrast shades.

It is the modish color plus color idea which so enhances the attractive frock in this picture. For this model the designer employs queen's blue crepe with French gray. The latter is used for the blouse below the bolero outline and for the collar and below-the-elbow sleeve puffs. Another color version which could be successfully worked out in this frock would be that of Grecian rose with monkey skin, the new pinkish tone introduced this season. Which all goes to show that the two-color theme is playing a tremendously important part in the styling of crepe, also crepe-satin frocks for afternoon wear.

Of no less interest than the color question is that of the supple silhouette, which is giving such a feminized aspect to the mode. Skirts whose fullness is attained through plaits or gathers, the bolero and the blouse combine to achieve the soft, pretty comforts so approved for the coming months. The frock in the picture is characteristic of this new vogue. For the upper portion of the bodice the stylist uses the queen's blue crepe, simulating a bolero posed over a very smart blouse. Plaits at the front of the skirt only, further interpret the mode.

The fact that so many of the new materials are soft and often sheer gives impetus to the new graceful silhouette.

Few Pastels

Brilliant rather than pastel shades are desirable in millinery this season, though there is a grayish blue felt that is very popular because it blends so well with gray furs.

Mink for Luxury Wear

Nothing is more exquisitely beautiful and flattering than mink which is almost as deep in tone as sable and has excellent wearing qualities. However, it is very expensive and only within reach of a gorgeous purse. Another costly wrap which reflected the mode of geometrics is an evening coat of ermine in which the skins formed an irregular blocked design of oblongs.

Colors Favored for Hosiery

At the moment the smartest colors in hosiery for general wear are gunmetal with black heels, and rose beige, which comes in both light and dark shades. Next in popularity are the clear warm tans.

A car for every purse and purpose

THIS YEAR the General Motors line is an imposing Automobile Show in itself.

Here is every style of body. Every type of design — four cylinder, six cylinder, eight cylinder. Every improvement. Every price, from the Chevrolet touring car at $510 to the Cadillac with special coach work at $9,000. A car for every purse and purpose.

Every one of the models now on display is different and distinguished. Yet two unifying characteristics bind them all together:

1 EVERY CLOSED BODY is by Fisher. The quality of all body workmanship is Fisher quality, and because Fisher is owned by General Motors, every resource has been utilized to make body and chassis a perfect quality unit.

2 EVERY MODEL has shared in the advantages of General Motors research, purchasing standards and Proving Ground tests; and in the economies of volume production. Dollar for dollar you will buy more value in the car you select because of General Motors quality and the public's purchase of more than 1,200,000 General Motors cars last year.

THE GENERAL MOTORS line is a direct result of the record-breaking patronage accorded by the public in 1926. The economies which this great volume afforded have been passed on to the car purchaser in even better quality. With great pride we invite you to inspect these new General Motors cars and to make one or more of them your own.

New of Menlo Park

The San Mateo County Federation met in the auditorium of the Menlo Park Grammar School on Friday, February 18, at 10 o'clock in the morning, holding an all-day session. Mrs. L. G. Owen presided. Delegates and presidents of twenty-one associations were present. An item of interest to the Federation was that the State has been re-districted, and on July 1 San Mateo County will be known as the 17th district. There will be no Fderations, but a local group of associations may meet as a council. This new 17th district will include all the districts in the county.

The Federation is helping seven students located in different high schools throughout the county to get a high school education. Boy Scouts, Campfire Girls, and kindred organizations are assisted by this Federation. The handicapped children, such as the blind or deaf or partially so, will also receive aid.

Mrs. Jansen of Redwood City was appointed on a special committee to look after such work. A teacher will be provided by the State for a class of seven. At present four of these children are being taken to the Gough School for Oral Deaf at San Francisco.

A very interesting program was enjoyed by all present. Mrs. Hoover, Founders Day chairman, announced a very original fantasy, which was dedicated to Mrs. Geo. Kiel, second district Founders Day chairman. It was the Child Welfare birthday and twenty-one boys represented the twenty-one associations of the Federation. Six girls round a tea table represented the six presidents, past and present, of the Federation.

The musical program directed by Mrs. M. Gibson, local music teacher, was as follows:

Songs—First, "America"; second, "I Love You California."

Piano selections by Victoria Parsons: (a) "Butterfly"; (b) "Juba."

The hisory of the organization was told by Mrs. Geo. Kiel, who paid high tribute to Mrs. Phoebe Hearst, who financed the first four years of the National.

Two candles were lighted by Mrs. C. P. Parsons in memory of Mrs. Theodore Birney and Mrs. Phoebe Hearst, and one in tribute to Mrs. O. Mears, National Founders Day chairman.

After the exercises, a delightful luncheon was served. The decorations were Federation colors—blue and yellow. The teachers of the local school were guests of the local association.

The rainfall for the season is 13 inches, far above normal. The rainfall at this time last year was 9 inches. The San Francisquito creek is running with a full head of water and the small stream at Atherton, the outlet for the Bear Gulch lake, is more than a third full. There will be no shortage of water on the peninsula this season.

James Gordon and C. Coulson, who robbed the Clemo Drug store some time ago, were removed to San Quentin last Saturday by Sheriff McGovern to serve an indeterminate sentence of from one to ten years for second degree burglary. Th other member of the trio, Robert Matthews, will be given probation and most likely he will be sent back to his parents in New York. Young Matthews was the innocent victim of Coulson, a veritable Fagan, who induced the youngster to aid in committing the crime.

Patrick Hopkins passed away at St. Catherine's Home in Fruitvale last Saturday evening and was buried from that institution on Tuesday. The interment was in Holy Cross cemetery here. The funeral cortege was the second to cross the Dumbarton bridge. Mr. Hopkins was a native of Ireland, aged 75 years. His youth was spent in Chicago where he had been engaged in business for many years. The deceased came to Menlo Park about fifteen years ago, making manyfriends while here by his jovial and happy manerism. He retired to the home about esven years ago. He is survived by a sister, Mrs. Burke, and a brother, James Hopkins, living in Menlo Park.

The new grammar school building being erected in Stanford Park is nearing completion but will not be ready for occupancy this term. It is well-arranged. It has two sunny class rooms, a commodious office, wide halls and high ceilings. The mission style of architecture predominates throughout the structure. As the population in that locality grows more class rooms may be added to the building. The trustees deserve credit for their taste and arrangement of the new building, which will add to land values in Stanford Park.

Menlo Parlor, N. S. G. W., will give a minstrel show in the New Menlo Theatre, Tuesday, March 1, for the benefit of the homeless children of the organization. The cause is a good one, the performance will be very interesting, so get your tickets for a front seat early.

Miss Rosalie Smith and Mrs. Howard Canine of Palo Alto spent the week-end and holiday in Los Angeles and Hollywood, visiting friends.

Eddie Hanlon, accused of killing Young Noonan in a cafe brawl in San Francisco during the week, was know here. Halon was a prominent figure at Camp Fremont during the war. He enlisted for the purpose of organizing the athletics of the camp. Being a professional boxer, he gave boxing lessons to the soldiers and entertained them by staging boxing bouts. Hanlon many years ago was a lightweight champion of the country.

L. E. Harris, editor of the Menlo Recorder, met with a distressing accident last week while engaged at work in his office here. The leg of a stool he was holding was driven, in a fall, through his abdomen piercing one of the intestines. He was removed at once to his home in San Jose, where he lay in a precarious condition for several days. At first it was thought he would not survive. Late accounts from the Garden City indicate that he will recover and will soon be convalescent.

Four petitions are being circulated by the people of Menlo Park seeking signatures asking the trustees of Atherton to be permitted to merge with that muicipality. The territory to be merged includes all of the Menlo Park sanitary district, which takes in the Coleman tract. Should the merger take place the proposed municipality will be the largest and richest on the peninsula. It is to be hoped the Atherton trustees will accept the petition. The election to be called will carry overwhelmingly.

Th following poem was given to us for publication by Miss E. Noel. Those having hammers should peruse it carefully:

BOOSTS

A hammer once said
To a nail, one day,
"I will knock you hard
On the head."
And the nail replied
"Just hammer away,
For your knocking
I have no dread."

"As a carpenter's tool,
I make no pretense,
But I'm good
In laying a floor,
Or putting a pailing
Upon a fence,
Where there was
No pailing before."

"I can help in building
A home for man,
Or in holding together
A box.
So hammer away,
As hard as you can,
I am not afraid
Of your knocks."

Thus, the hammers in life
We should not despise,
But let them hit on
With their might,
For we'll find every knock
Is a help in disguise,
To hold to the things
That are right.

If the way through life's sea
Was easy to sail,
And there were no jolts
To be found,
I fear very much
We would be like a nail,
That is only
Laying around.

Th Fifth Annual Flower Show will be held April 20 and 21, 1927, in Native Sons Hall, 414 Mason street, San Francisco.

The schools of the state, outside the large cities, are asked to send the native Flora of their vicinities, with due regard to conserving the flowers. There are prizes for the best San Francisco home garden, home, meaning a garden where the work is done by the members of a family and not by employed gardeners. Also a prize for best display from a San Francisco home garden of old-fashioned flowers.

There will be a room devoted to flowers used in the decoration of the home, as before a picture, are books, etc., the arrangement to be the main point, and the vases, etc., brought by the exhibitor.

Following a brief illness Thomas C. Cochrane, a widely-known citizen of Menlo Park, passed to the great beyond last Friday afternoon. His sudden death was a shock to his family and friends. He had been ailing for some time but his sickness was not considered serious. The funeral on Monday was largely attended by friends from various points of the peninsula. Interment was in Holy Cross cemetery here. Mr. Cochrane was born in Pennsylvania nearly seventy years ago but came to San Francisco as a young man where he learned the carpenter trade and later became a well-known contractor and builder. He came to Menlo Park close to a quarter of a century ago and for many years was the superintendent for John MacBain in the construction of his large buildings in this locality. Mr. Cochrane was a skilled mechanic, a good architect and a builder of well-known capacity. Mr. Cochrane was well-liked and admired by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. He was kind and gentle and thoroughly devoted to his interesting family. A beautiful new home had just been completed and the family was preparing to move in when the Death Angel called Mr. Cochrane away. The deceased is survived by his widow and two children, Mrs. B. Larrecou and Dr. Redman Cochrane, and his brother-in-law and sister-in-law, Sir Arubrey and Lady Brisco. The latter were at the funeral. They are now sojourning in this country. The bereaved family have the sympathy of the community in their sorrow.

WYOMING TELEPHONES

In 1882, while Wyoming was still a territory and just six years after it had been found possible for one person to talk to another by wire, the first telephone was installed when a toll line was built between Sheridan and Cheyenne. The next year a toll line was built between Cheyenne and Laramie. These lines were used largely by cattlemen.

NEW CANDY STORE OPENS ON BROADWAY

Gould's Candy Store, the latest addition to the local business district, opened for business at the corner of Broadway and Arch street this week. The new store is directly across the street from the Sequoia Union High School and is proving a very popular place with the school children. Luncheon and breakfast are served at the new establishment in connection with a completely equipped fountain and candy counter.

The new store has the agency here for Wilson's condy of Palo Alto, "the candy yith the college education." The location is in the building recently completed by C. D. Jessup of this city, and has been completely fitted out for the new proprietors, in a very artistic and unique manner making it a pleasat addition to the business places of that section.

SKAGGS SAFEWAY STORES

Distribution Without Waste

The Difference in "Service"

There is a noticeable difference between the service rendered by the Safeway Man and the manner in which the ordinary grocery clerk "waits on" you. The reason for this difference lies in the mental "attitude" of eoch toward his work. The Safeway Man is in the food distributing business because he LIKES it. It is his deliberately chosen vocation and the service he renders is based upon a feeling of actual interest in and consideration for his patrons. His sithe artisan's "pride of craftsmanship" and he has willingly undergone a long period of intensive training in order that the service he renders may measure up to the ideals of the institution of which he is a part. Cotrast the courteous helpfulness of the e of the man who is merely "clerking" Safeway Man with the careless indifference because circumstances force him to follow such work. The immeasurable advantage of dealing with the Safeway Man will be readily apparent. Also, you will more readily understand why our stores are so popular with discriminating housewives.
